Maki Fukuoka is an art historian teaching at the School of Fine Art, History of Art and Cultural Studies at the University of Leeds. Her research focuses on the intersections of cultural history and the material and visual culture of modernity, particularly through photography in East Asia. Her first book, The Premise of Fidelity: Science, Visuality and Representing the Real in Nineteenth-Century Japan, was published in 2012 by the Stanford University Press. This upcoming talk is based on the ongoing research for a manuscript project Shaping Likeness, which explores the intersection between the concept of portraiture and political roles and social uses of portraiture in Meiji.

Funding for the Japan seminars in the series has been generously provided by the Great Britain Sasakawa Foundation

For further information contact: Dr John Swenson-Wright
Senior Lecturer in Japanese Politics and International Relations
Faculty of Asian & Middle Eastern Studies, Sidgwick Avenue Cambridge, CB3 9DA (UK), Email: jhs22@cam.ac.uk